

said, "I love the fact that someone is teaching us with so much personal experience. Whenever I see their performance at EPCOT, I like to listen and play the song in my mind, acting it out." Bryana Saint Urbain (7th grader) said, "I like their attitude during the lessons. As soon as we walk into the room, they are smiling, and they stay that way throughout the whole class! They are neither lenient nor strict – they are just right."

Takemasa and Yuko want their Taiko lessons to be a gateway to the authentic Japanese culture, but Takemasa added, "the ultimate goal is to foster inner strength in children such as self-motivation through Taiko, which will be a key for success in life. Of course, teaching is a great challenge for us, but I see "the future" in children, and it makes me very responsible." The wisdom of the master is surely delivered to his disciples at the Montessori School of Celebration where "the essence of Taiko Dojo" is presented.
